“ I met Jocelyn through her husband Peter. I met Peter when we were both working for the City of Raleigh. I remember my first time meeting Jocelyn was at a ginger bread building contest at Nicole's house. Peter and Jocelyn together were trading witty banter and trash talking our feeble ginger bread house- making my wife and I laugh until we were practically in tears. Over the next few years I got to know Jocelyn as a warm and funny person who had a love of life. That she fought so hard against her cancer and had the support of Peter inspired all those around her. I will miss your playful shaming of my awful gingerbread houses and will miss seeing you at our house parties.

“ I met Jocelyn at the Business Intelligence course at WakeTech. I love to see bright inquisitive minds speak up and share their thoughts, and she was always one I enjoyed hearing from. Always questioning, adding an insight, creating a spark. What also endeared Jocelyn to me was her willingness to share and help those who had questions, or needed an extra push forward. She was always on top and ahead of everyone and everything in the class, motivated to give 200% to what she undertook. She completed what she started even though by then she had learnt of diagnosis, and even was making future plans. Jocelyn's spirit was truly exemplary in every way, and that is the beautiful lesson she leaves for the rest of us. Embrace life and live it the fullest, do everything giving it 100%, and lead through words and actions, bringing everyone together for a shared success. Jocelyn, you will be missed! I will miss the inspirational texts you sent me, and your caring ways.
